IF I COULD INVENT SOMETHING NEW

Being able to create something that could change the lives of individuals would be awesome wouldn't it? Being proud of yourself knowing that no other individual would have to lose someone dear to them would be something I would like to create. A cure for a disease but not just any disease but a cure for Coronavirus.

The coronavirus first struck in late 2019 and became a rapid disease that killed up to 15 million people. Unfortunately, my mom was one of the unlucky ones. She had gotten the disease and we thought we could save her but three weeks after she flew overseas, we were struck with dreadful news, I had lost my mom to the cold hands of death.

At that moment I did not know what to do because at that time I was seen mourning my mother's loss. It took me some time but eventually a question popped up in my head. I asked myself what if I could invent something new?, Something beneficial to society, something that could change someone's life so that millions of people every day would not have to go through the pain of losing a loved one as I did.

How would I start? You may ask I would start by breaking all the symptoms of this chronic disease. The symptoms that have a cure to them I would analyze it. Getting formulas and storing them. Once I have gotten a sufficient case, I would take my idea to a health organization such as WHO (World Health Organization). I would share my ideas with them and if approved I would start testing it with the help of the organization.

The organization would provide me with an appropriate lab to further my research. I would be assisted with my research, being provided with other scientists who would help me and animals that we could try our theories on. It would take us some time but it would all be worth it. After all the tests and research that would have been conducted, if we were to finally get a solution, it would first be sold at an affordable price so that individuals of all standards could afford it.

Knowing that I could create a cure for a disease that took my mother away from me will always be one of the goals I would want to achieve in life. No joy would be better than knowing that you created a cure that could not just save your community but the world at large. Being fully aware that you just created a cure that could save over 5 million around the world. That would be something new I could create.
