IF I COULD INVENT SOMETHING NEW

Waking up late for school on this so-called faithful day, my siblings decided not to assist me with ironing my school uniform the previous day, I totally forgot and hurriedly had my bath, wore my rumpled uniform while trying to meet up with my siblings to join the school bus.

Generally, while growing up dashing out of the house without my parents properly inspecting our school uniform is very impossible, so my siblings and I must be properly dressed (well ironed uniforms and well polished shoes) before we leave the house. But on this day, it was totally different, I feel my parents purposely let me go to school that way so I could be punished. I had a speech on that same day, but I couldn't present it because I was wearing a rumpled school uniform.

Lots of children in my class dress so roughly to school with UN-ironed uniform and are being punished by the teachers on daily basis. So in order to make this world a better place, especially in Nigeria, I thought of inventing rechargeable pressing iron or irons with replaceable batteries would do more good than harm because putting on rumpled clothes either to school or church service makes me feel very uncomfortable and less confident of my self in public.

A lot of people would want to counter my idea with the notation that we have an already existing coal iron, but then not everyone know the proper way to control the hotness of the coal in the iron, and not everyone will be able to get easy access to the coal.

I believe that having this wonderful invention of either the rechargeable or the battery pressing iron, will make life easier especially in this part of the world where the power supply is deteriorating. Parents can comfortably purchase this and not worry about the inconsistent power supply they can either decide to recharge their iron when there is light and save the power energy for future purpose when there is power shortage.

Children can have their dresses properly ironed for both school and church service and each child will look smart and confident while going out and parents too are not left out in this beautiful invention.
